Introduction

This guide will enable family historians with South Yorkshire ancestors to discover just what genealogical sources are available and where they are to be found. For various historical and administrative reasons, South Yorkshire resources are not neatly concentrated in any one record repository and those in search of their South Yorkshire roots may have to visit record offices and libraries as far apart as York and Lichfield. For this reason the four archive and local studies services in South Yorkshire (Barnsley, Doncaster, Rotherham and Sheffield) have worked together to compile a single guide to the holdings of their offices and to genealogical source material held elsewhere. This Guide is a supplement to more detailed information available on each of the services websites.

The key genealogical resources are listed - church, chapel and cemetery registers, trade directories and probate records. Also included is a section on internet and other electronic sources. More information than ever before is being made available online, not only by the archives and local studies services themselves but also by popular genealogical websites such as Ancestry.com, FindMyPast and Genes Reunited, etc.

The addresses of the various record repositories and libraries whose holdings feature in this guide are shown at page 130. Researchers are advised to check days and times of opening, either by checking the relevant website or by telephoning / emailing the office concerned.

In addition to the information in this Guide the following national websites are worth consulting:

Genuki - an extensive website which contains detailed historical information about many places in the UK together with details of relevant libraries and archive centres www.genuki.org.uk

The ARCHON directory includes contact details for record repositories in the United Kingdom and also for institutions elsewhere in the world which have substantial collections of manuscripts noted under the indexes to the National Register of Archives www.nationalarchives.gov.uk/archon

Access to Archives is part of the UK archives network. The A2A database contains many (but not all) catalogues describing archives held locally in England and Wales (including all of the South Yorkshire services) and dating from the eighth century to the present day www.nationalarchives.gov.uk/a2a

Anglican Parish Registers

While it is possible to trace one's ancestors back to 1837 using only civil registration records, anyone wishing to extend their family tree beyond that date will almost certainly need to consult parish registers. The history of parish registers and their use in genealogy has been well documented in a number of books (e.g. McLaughlin, Eve, Parish Registers (Federation of Family History Societies, 2000)) and there seems little point in doing other than give a brief outline here.

The registration of baptisms, marriages and burials (not births, marriages and deaths) was introduced in 1538. In 1597 the parish clergy were ordered to copy their existing registers into 'fair parchment books' but in many cases the copying only extended back to Queen Elizabeth's accession in 1558. Unfortunately many parishes have lost their early registers but it may be possible to fill the gap by consulting the Bishop's Transcripts. From 1598 each parish was required to send a copy of the previous year's entries to their bishop. Readers wanting a brief account of the history and contents of parish registers should consult Parish Registers by Eve McLaughlin (Federation of Family History Societies 1986).

As a result of the Parochial Registers and Records Measure of 1978, the great majority of registers have been deposited in Diocesan Record Offices [DRO].

The Diocese of Sheffield has two DROs. Sheffield Archives is the Diocesan Record Office for the Archdeaconry of Sheffield (which includes Rotherham). Doncaster Archives is the DRO for the Archdeaconry of Doncaster. These two repositories now hold the bulk of the original parish registers and other parish records for the Diocese of Sheffield.

Although the bulk of South Yorkshire falls within the Diocese of Sheffield, the boundaries of the two units do not coincide:-

- Sheffield Diocese includes a number of parishes on the south bank of the River Ouse in East and North Yorkshire. Their registers are deposited at Doncaster Archives.
- The north east corner of the county, including Barnsley and Penistone, falls within the Diocese of Wakefield. Parish records from this area are deposited at West Yorkshire Archives, Wakefield.
- In the south east of the county, the parishes of Austerfield, Bawtry and Finningley fall within the Diocese of Southwell and the registers are deposited at the Nottinghamshire Archives Office.

Until the 19th century, it was common for large parishes to have chapels-of-ease to serve outlying areas. These chapels often kept their own registers of baptisms and burials but marriages were usually still conducted at the mother church. In the 19th century most chapels of ease became parish churches in their own right. A large number of new parishes were created in the 19th century to serve areas of growing population. These often began as chapels of ease and were not licensed for marriages until they became parish churches. Entries which predate the building of the new church or its licensing for marriages should be sought in the registers of the mother church (e.g. entries for baptisms for a family living at Kimberworth before 1843 will be found in the Rotherham parish registers).

Many Victorian urban churches had no graveyard. Burials would normally take place in the municipal cemetery and be recorded in the cemetery register, not the church register. In some cases the church would keep a register of burial where the rector or vicar conducted a service and these burials will therefore be recorded in both registers.

Bishop's transcripts are frequently used by family historians to supplement parish registers and can often fill in gaps where the original registers are missing or illegible. The bishop's transcripts for the bulk of the parishes in South Yorkshire are among the York Diocesan Records held at the Borthwick Institute in York. They have been microfilmed and copies of the film are available locally in South Yorkshire. The transcripts for Austerfield, Bawtry and Finningley are held at Nottinghamshire Archives. A few parishes to the south of Sheffield were formerly in Derbyshire. Their bishop's transcripts are at the Lichfield Joint Record Office.

It has now become common for diocesan register offices to have their parish registers microfilmed and to make them available to readers only as microfilm or microfiche. This has made it possible for record repositories that are not DROs to obtain copies of the parish registers for their own area. There has also been much activity on the part of individuals and family history societies to provide transcripts of and indexes to parish registers.

The list that follows covers all the ecclesiastical parishes within South Yorkshire plus the East Yorkshire parishes within the Archdeaconry of Doncaster. It shows the original parish registers and microfilm, transcripts etc. held by the four archive services in the County as at August 2010. No attempt has been made to indicate gaps in runs of original registers.

Original registers dating after those shown in the list will still be held (at the time of going to press) by the parish church concerned.

Where a parish originated as a chapel-of ease or was formed out of another parish, the name of the mother parish is given in brackets.

The reference "O(M)" indicates that the repository holds the original registers but that the whole, or part of them, have been microfilmed and readers will normally be expected to consult the microfilm.

Non-conformist and Catholic Registers

In comparison with the Church of England, the registers of Nonconformist churches are neither as consistent nor as numerous, for a variety of reasons. Very few Nonconformist registers survive before the mid eighteenth century. but from that period those outside the Established Church - the Roman Catholics, Society of Friends (or Quakers) and the Independents - were joined by the Methodists whose membership increased rapidly. By the early nineteenth century the Methodists were numerically the most important of the Nonconformist denominations although they had already begun to divide into separate groups or 'connexions', the largest of which joined together in 1932. The Methodists also had a distinctive organisation. Chapels were grouped into 'circuits' and these also sometimes kept registers.

Before the twentieth century, the great majority of all Nonconformist registers are of baptisms or births. There have never been many chapels with their own burial grounds and so most Nonconformists would have been buried in parish churchyards. The law of marriage was strict after the Marriage Act of 1753, often referred to as Lord Hardwick's Act. Under its provisions, apart from Jews and Quakers, legal marriages could only take place in a parish church. As a result, most marriages between Nonconformists are to be found in the parish registers.

From 1837 all places of worship could be registered as places for marriages. But the legal registration of the marriage was undertaken by the local civil registrar who attended at the chapel (civil registration was also introduced in 1837) and so the marriage entry will be found in the registers of the civil registrar. There was, of course, no reason why the chapel should not keep its own informal register of marriages which took place there, but very few did.

The Marriage Act, 1898 gave Nonconformists the right to have a member of their congregation authorised to register marriages. The authorised person had the duty of making returns to the Registrar General and keeping a duplicate register at the chapel. When a Nonconformist church is closed, this duplicate register is sent to the Registrar General. Duplicate marriage registers of Methodist churches in South Yorkshire are transferred to the relevant district archive service.

An Act of Parliament in 1840 authorised the General Register Office to take into its keeping the registers of any Nonconformist chapel which wished to deposit them. These, known as the 'non-parochial registers', are now housed in the National Archives, but microfilm copies are available locally, as can be seen from the list.

The Roman Catholic Diocese of Hallam has appointed Sheffield Archives to act as the record office for the diocese, which comprises South Yorkshire and parts of Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire.

The history of the various Nonconformist denominations, with details of the records generated by them, is dealt with by D. J. Steel in

'Sources for nonconformist genealogy and family history' (Phillimore 1973).

The Roman Catholic church is similarly dealt with by the same author's 'Sources for Roman Catholic and Jewish genealogy and family history' (Phillimore 1974). Readers should note that the locations given for some of the records in these books are now out of date.

Wherever possible the Nonconformist denomination has been identified in the list and the following abbreviations have been used:

Methodist

M = if not otherwise identified

NC = New Connexion

PM = Primitive Methodist

UM = United Methodist

WM = Wesleyan Methodist

WR = Wesleyan Reform

Other

A = Apostolic

B = Baptist

C = Congregational

CNOD = Christians - Not Otherwise Designated

FC = Free Christian

I = Independent

L = Lutheran

P = Pentecostal

PB = Plymouth Brethren

RC = Roman Catholic

NS = National Spiritualist

SA = Salvation Army

SF = Society of Friends

U = Unitarian

UR = United Reformed

An entry followed by (M) indicates a microfilm copy, and (P) indicates a photocopy. Copies may be held by more than one District Archives Department and in such cases there will be more than one entry in the list. Hence, for example, both Doncaster and Sheffield hold microfilm copies of the registers of Burghwallis

Cemetery and Crematoria Registers

With the growth of population during the 19th century, many churchyards, particularly in urban areas, became full to overflowing. To combat this problem, there was a growth in the 1830s and 1840s of private cemeteries established by bodies of shareholders.

Most of these private cemeteries were initially unconsecrated and were therefore used only by nonconformists, but in time they all obtained consecrated sections which allowed Anglicans to be buried. Later in the century many burial boards were established to create new burial grounds and these often took over the private cemeteries. The burial boards in turn were absorbed by the boroughs and urban districts that were established later in the century, although Sheffield General Cemetery remained privately owned until the end. Further municipal cemeteries were established as the need arose.

In most cases the original registers for these cemeteries are now held by the Cemeteries Dept. of the relevant Metropolitan Borough Council. Most have, however, been microfilmed and the film is available at the local record repository.

The amount of genealogical information that is given in the registers varies greatly. Later registers commonly give only the deceased's name, age, description, where died and date of burial. All registers give the reference number of the grave. This normally allows the grave to be identified on the ground and the gravestone may give additional information. In addition to the burial registers, in many instances there are also grave registers which list the names of all the persons buried in a particular grave.

The cemeteries for which microform copies or original registers are held by the four archive and local studies services are listed below.

Monumental Inscriptions

The term as used here includes inscriptions on wall tablets, etc. inside churches and on gravestones and memorial stones in churchyards and public cemeteries. Few outside inscriptions survive prior to the seventeenth century. From then on they become more numerous. They will always record the better off members of society as the poorest would not be able to afford a stone. There were nonconformist as well as Anglican burial grounds. The first public cemetery was opened in London in 1827 and other municipal cemeteries followed.

Gravestones are eroded by exposure to the elements or may be removed or displaced when a churchyard or cemetery is tidied up. Transcripts of the inscriptions may be the only surviving record of information which once appeared on a stone. The information will usually include the name of the deceased and date of death. It may also include age at death and occupation. Frequently several members of a family are mentioned on one stone with a record of the family relationships. A stone may give further details of ancestry and mention members of the family who are buried elsewhere. Ages on gravestones should be treated with caution as they may have been added a long time after the death of the person concerned.

This list indicates any churchyard or public cemetery for which there are transcripts of the inscriptions on the grave or memorial stones. In many cases the transcript will be accompanied by a plan of the churchyard, enabling individual graves to be easily located.

Wills and Inventories

Although wills and probate inventories are not the first sources to which amateur genealogists will turn in search of their family history, they can be a very useful means of adding leaves to the bare branches of a family tree. A will may refer to obscure branches of the family that could never be found by searching parish registers while a probate inventory can give useful information about the testator's personal possessions and lifestyle. Not everybody left a will but a surprising number of people did. Conversely, a large number of people who might have been expected to leave a will, did not. More details about the legal and historical background to wills can be found in McLaughlin, Eve, Wills before 1858 and Somerset House Wills from 1858 (Federation of Family History Societies, 2002 and 1996) and in Gibson, J. S. W., A Simplified Guide to Probate Jurisdictions: Where to Look for Wills (Federation of family History Societies, 2002). Most books on family history contain a chapter on wills.

From the 16th to the 18th century, many wills were accompanied by a probate inventory. Made within a short period of the testator's death by a group of friends and neighbours, the inventory lists and values all the deceased's personal property, i.e. money, clothing, furniture, household, farming and trade goods and debts owing. Occasionally the furniture etc. is listed room by room which can enable the layout of the house to be reconstructed.

Before 1858 the probate of wills was the prerogative of ecclesiastical courts. The will of a testator dying with property lying within a single diocese would be proved in the appropriate diocesan court. For most of South Yorkshire that was the Diocese of York. Probate records for the Diocese of York are held at the Borthwick Institute for Archives in York www.york.ac.uk/library/borthwick. Indexes for the Prerogative and Exchequer Courts of York, 1731-1858, all the peculiar court probate indexes, and all the probate records before 1500 are available at www.origins.net

If he or she left property in more than one diocese within a single province, the will would be dealt with by the archbishop's court. If the property was found in both provinces (Canterbury and York), the will was proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury (PCC). All PCC Wills held by The National Archives (grouped in the series PROB 11), covering the period 1384 – 1858 are available on www.nationalarchives.gov.uk/documentsonline/wills.asp. Many nonconformists and the upper classes tended to have their wills proved in the PCC, wherever their property lay. As an added complication, certain parishes or groups of parishes were ecclesiastical peculiars with their own probate courts. Several South Yorkshire parishes fell within the peculiar of the Dean and Chapter of York.

When a will was proved, the probate court retained the original will and inventory. A probate copy of the will was made for the executors and a further copy was made in the court register. The courts also granted letters of administration for the estates of persons dying intestate but these contain little genealogical information. The bulk of the pre-1858 original wills and inventories and register copy wills for South Yorkshire, including those for the Dean and Chapter peculiar, are now held at the Borthwick Institute for Archives in York as mentioned above. Full details of the Institute's holdings will be found in A guide to the archive collections of the Borthwick Institute of Historical Research by D.M. Smith (University of York 1973) and A guide to genealogical sources in the Borthwick Institute of Historical Research by C.C. Webb (University of York 1983). Printed indexes to wills and administrations 1389-1688 were published in 16 volumes in the Yorkshire Archaeological Society Record Series and these are often available in local studies libraries. The Institute has various other printed and manuscript indexes to wills in its collections and the staff can undertake limited searches in return for a fee.

There are two small areas of the County whose pre-1858 wills are not at York. The parishes of Austerfield, Bawtry and Finningley were in the Archdeaconry of Nottingham (now Diocese of Southwell). Their wills etc. are now at the Nottinghamshire Archives Office. Wills for the former Derbyshire parishes of Beauchief, Beighton, Dore, Mosbrough, Norton and Totley (Diocese of Lichfield) are now at the Lichfield Joint Record Office.

From 12 January 1858 a civil system of probate registration came into operation with a central registry in London and a network of district registries (roughly one per county). The local probate registry retained the original will plus a registered copy and sent another copy to the Principal Registry in London. As before, a probate copy was given to the executors. The bulk of South Yorkshire fell within the district of the Wakefield Registry. Original wills proved at Wakefield 1858-1939 are now at the York District Probate Sub-registry while the registered copies are at the West Yorkshire Archives (Wakefield). For the former Derbyshire parishes, such as Norton, the original wills to 1928 are at the Birmingham District Registry while the registered copies are at the Derbyshire Record Office.

Since 1858 an annual consolidated index to grants of probate and letters of administration for England and Wales has been published by HMSO. This gives the name of the deceased, date and place of death, date and place of probate and name of executor together with a valuation of the estate. Armed with information gleaned from the index, it is possible to obtain a copy of a will from the appropriate district registry, record office or from the Principal Registry. A microfiche set of the indexes for 1858-1934 is held at Sheffield Archives and sets are also held at West Yorkshire Archive Service (Wakefield) and Nottinghamshire Archives Office. Copies of all post-1858 wills and administrations for England and Wales are held at the National Archives. A small fee is charged for consultation of the records and photocopies are obtainable.

In addition to the main runs of probate records in the court and registry records, individual wills can also be found among collections of other archives. Wills often affect the descent of real property and therefore both probate copies and later lawyers' copies of wills are often found among bundles of title deeds. They may also be found among collections of family papers. Deposits made by firms of solicitors are a particularly fruitful source of wills. Such collections may contain drafts and super-seded wills which may include information that does not appear in the will as proved. It is always worth checking the personal name index at the local record office.

Annual indexes of Calendars of Grants of Probate and Letters of Administration made in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury and District Probate Registries 1853-1934 (microfiche) are available at Sheffield Archives as well as genealogical websites such as Ancestry.com.

Directories

The origins of trade and street directories can be traced to the 17th century but it was not until the late 18th century that they became common and not until the 19th century that they became really useful to the family historian. The early history and development of directories has been well covered by Jane E. Norton in the introduction to her Guide to the national and provincial directories of England and Wales excluding London, published before 1956 (Royal Historical Society, 1984).

In common with all the sources listed in this Guide, directories were not produced with the family historian in mind. They were aimed at the commercial, business and upper classes and it is these sections of society whose names are listed in them. Most of the directories listed below follow a standard format with a brief history and description of the town or village, with details of the churches, chapels, schools etc. followed by a list of the main inhabitants, often classified by occupation. From the middle of the 19th century, the directories begin to include street directories for the larger towns. By the late 19th century the entries for Barnsley, Doncaster, Rotherham and Sheffield usually comprise a street by street listing followed by an alphabetical listing (often divided into private and commercial inhabitants) and a classified listing. The entries for the smaller towns and villages normally comprise a single alphabetical listing.

When using directories for genealogical purposes, there are a number of points which should be borne in mind. At best the directories list around 40% of the households in any town or village. In the street directory sections, the fact that a particular house number does not appear may mean that the house was not built at the date of the directory or that the householder was not considered important enough to be included. In the 20th century directories the street entries are much fuller with an entry of almost every house. Women are normally only listed if they were householders in their own right or ran their own business.

The list below contains most of the directories for the South Yorkshire area that are available locally but it does not claim to be exhaustive. Some parts of South Yorkshire were originally in Derbyshire or included in neighbouring county directories such as Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire. It is advisable to check with local studies and archive services in those counties for places on the edge of the county. Directories are only listed up to 1974, the year in which the Kelly's series ceased publication. From this date the Yellow Pages telephone directories are a useful source of information. These are available at most of the local archives and local studies services.

A number of trade directories have been digitised and are available to view on the internet via www.historicaldirectories.org. These are indicated by 'WWW' in the table below. Others may also be available via <http://books.google.com/books>

Electoral Registers and Poll Books

Although electoral registers cannot be claimed to be primary genealogical sources, they have their uses for the family historian. In the period before universal male suffrage, the registers give an indication of the status of the people listed in them. They can also be useful for tracing families who have moved.

Prior to the 1832 Reform Act, Yorkshire returned two members to Parliament. Those claiming the right to vote had to appear in person on polling day, prove their claim and cast their votes in public. No registers were kept of persons entitled to vote. The votes cast by each elector were recorded in a manuscript poll book. Unfortunately almost all the manuscript poll books were destroyed in 1907. Luckily it was normal, after an election, for the poll book to be published.

The poll books list the votes cast by each voter but do not list those who were entitled to vote and did not bother to travel to the poll town. One result of the 1832 Act was that electoral registers had to be compiled, as only those people whose names appeared in the register were entitled to vote. Poll books continued to be published until the secret ballot was introduced in 1872.

Different qualifications to vote applied for counties and boroughs for different periods. Following the 1832 Reform Act anyone having a life interest in and occupying land or tenements over £2 and under £5 was eligible, as were all other holders of real property worth at least £10 (reduced to £5 in 1867) for the counties. In boroughs occupiers or tenants of buildings worth at least £10 p.a. were given the right to vote provided they had occupied the property for at least 12 months before registration.

The number of those who were entitled to vote was further increased by the reform acts of 1867 and 1884. Universal male suffrage was introduced by the reform act of 1918 which also extended the franchise to most women over 30. Adult female suffrage finally arrived in 1928. Electoral registers were compiled annually, except 1916 - 1917 and 1940 - 1944 (when there were none) and 1919 - 1926 and 1945 - 1949 (when there were Spring and Autumn registers).

Further details about the background to and development of registers will be found in J Gibson, J. and C. Rogers, Electoral Registers Since 1832 (Federation of Family History Societies, 1990).

The 1832 Act constituted the West Riding (outside a number of parliamentary boroughs) as a single constituency, returning two members. In 1865, the West Riding was divided into Northern and Southern Divisions, each returning two members. The Southern Division was in turn divided in 1885 to create eight single member constituencies, of which four concern South Yorkshire:- Barnsley; Doncaster; Hallamshire (including Sheffield); Rotherham. In 1918 Barnsley, Rotherham and Sheffield became borough constituencies, with the rest of South Yorkshire divided between various county constituencies. Doncaster became a county constituency in 1949. Parliamentary boroughs compiled their own electoral registers while the registers for county constituencies were drawn up by the West Riding. For this reason, many of the early registers are not held locally but are at the West Yorkshire Archive Service (Wakefield).

From 1974 the South Yorkshire registers became the responsibility of the four metropolitan borough councils

A distinction should be drawn between electoral registers and burgess rolls. The latter relate to the right to vote in borough council elections, the franchise for which was rather larger than that for parliamentary elections. Unmarried women could qualify to vote in municipal elections from 1869.

Before 1884 registers are usually in alphabetical order. After that date they are normally in street order which makes it difficult to find a particular person unless the address is known. Before 1915 there were several ways in which it was possible to qualify to vote and the register indicates the qualification.

Many poll books are now available to view via GoogleBooks. These are indicated on the list below.

B. ELECTORAL REGISTERS

The list below gives the various constituencies that have fallen wholly or partly within the area of South Yorkshire since 1832 with an indication of where the registers may be seen. Some constituencies have borne the same name since 1918 but in most cases the boundaries will have been altered in 1949 and 1983. In 1983 some of the new constituencies were given the names of constituencies that had existed 1918 - 1949 (cf Wentworth) but the boundaries are usually completely different.

Note also that constituency boundaries are not revised at the same time as local authority ward boundaries which can lead to some confusion. For example Sheffield's holdings include Stocksbridge, South Wortley, Chapel Green and Penistone wards for 1975/6 and 1976/7

- BC = Borough Constituency
CC = County Constituency

Other Sources

The various sources listed above are the main (local) sources used for the study of family history. There are, however, a number of other categories of documents from which genealogical information can be gleaned.

Census Returns

The 19th and early 20th century census returns are a treasure house of genealogical information and an invaluable aid to the family historian. For reasons of confidentiality, the returns are only available to the public when they are 100 years old. Therefore, the latest census that is currently available is that for 1911.

From 1851 the Census returns list every person in every household in every town, village and hamlet with details of relationships, ages, occupations and places of birth. The 1841 census is less helpful in that relationships are not stated, adult ages are rounded down and the exact place of birth is not given. Finding your family in the census returns can save hours (or days) of searching through parish registers. The use of census returns in family history research is well covered by the many family history text books.

The original census returns are in at The National Archives, however they are all available to research on the major genealogical websites such as www.ancestry.com, www.findmypast.com, www.bmdindex.co.uk, www.genesreunited.co.uk. Ancestry.com is available for free in every library in South Yorkshire.

Microfilm copies are also available. The library service or archive repository for each metropolitan district in South Yorkshire holds microfilm of the census returns for their own area. In Barnsley and Doncaster the microfilm for 1841-1901 are held at the Central Library. Rotherham Archives and Local Studies holds the film for Rotherham Metropolitan Borough 1841 - 1901. Sheffield Archives hold films for the whole of South Yorkshire 1841- 1881, while Sheffield Local Studies Library, has the whole county for 1881 and Sheffield and the surrounding area 1841 - 1901. More detailed information about holdings is available from the repository concerned.

Births, Marriages and Deaths

Records of the civil registration of births, marriages and deaths from 1837 for the four metropolitan districts of south Yorkshire are held by the Register Offices in Barnsley, Doncaster, Rotherham and Sheffield. It is not possible to search the registers in person but copies of certificates may be purchased. The Register Office staff will require fairly accurate details (date, place etc.) before a certificate can be found.

Copies of the registers for the whole country are held at the National Archives in London, however, many local archives and library services have microfilm copies of the indexes and, in addition, the indexes are available on the major genealogical websites such as www.ancestry.com, www.findmypast.com, www.bmdindex.co.uk, www.genesreunited.co.uk, and www.192.com

Ancestry.com is available for free at all libraries and archives services in South Yorkshire.

Civil Parish Records

These comprise the records of the civil administration of the parish in the days before the modern system of local government was introduced in the late 19th century. The records of the parish officers (overseers, constables and surveyors of the highways) can contain much that is useful to the family historian. The records of the overseers of the poor can be particularly fruitful e.g. settlement certificates and examinations, bastardy bonds, poor rate assessment, accounts of money paid to paupers, parish apprenticeships etc. It is often a matter of chance whether any civil parish records have survived for a particular parish. Those that have survived are normally deposited in the appropriate diocesan record office together with the ecclesiastical parish records (see the section on parish registers above). In some cases the civil parish material has become separated from the ecclesiastical records and may be deposited elsewhere (e.g. civil parish records for Greasbrough and Brampton Bierlow are deposited at Rotherham).

Court Records

Quarter Sessions court dealt with relatively minor crime such as robbery, issuing counterfeit coins, assault, petty theft as well as disputes about settlement and bastardy, licensing of public houses etc.

Records of Doncaster Quarter Sessions (from the 16th century) are available at Doncaster Archives Department.

Sheffield held its own Quarter Sessions Court from 1864 - for further information see <http://www.sheffield.gov.uk/libraries/archives-and-local-studies/what-collections-do-we-have/court-of-quarter-session-records>

Prior to 1864 cases were held at the West Riding Court of Quarter Sessions the records of which are held by the West Yorkshire Archive Service (Wakefield). For more details see Barber, B. J., Guide to the quarter Sessions records of the West Riding of Yorkshire 1637-1971 (West Yorkshire Archive Joint Committee, 1984). More serious criminal cases, which could result in hanging or transportation, were heard by the Assize Court at York. Surviving records for this Court are at the National Archives in London. Records of lesser courts (Magistrates Courts, County Courts) are now often held by local archive services. These courts deal with minor criminal offences and small debt cases and their records contain little of genealogical value.

Title Deeds

Title deeds can often contain hidden genealogical material in the form of references to wives, husbands and ancestors. All the archive services in South Yorkshire hold deposits of title deeds but their usefulness from the family history point of view will depend on the extent to which the names in the deeds have been indexed. The records of the West Riding Registry of Deeds are held at the West Yorkshire Archive Service (Wakefield). The deed registers contain memorials (short summaries) of virtually all the deeds relating to land within the West Riding (except copyhold land and short leases) between 1704 and 1970.

Military Records

Family historians with ancestors who served in the armed forces may be able to trace their careers at the National Archives at Kew. TNA hold records relating to the Army (soldiers discharged before 1913), Royal Navy (to c.1890) and Royal Marines (to 1940).

The York and Lancaster Regimental Museum and Archive is based in Rotherham Central Library.
