During World War I local newspapers regularly published small photographs of local servicemen, with varying amounts of biographical information to go with them. They also sometimes published letters servicemen had sent to their families, and interviews describing their experiences at the Front. This publication contains the following:

Section 1 Examples of interviews and letters published in the Sheffield Daily Independent 1 Aug 1914 - 31 Dec 1915.

Section 2 Index of Photographs of local soldiers and sailors which appeared in the Sheffield Daily Independent 1 Aug 1914 - 31 Dec 1915.

Bailey, Private J.

Private Bailey served with the 1st Lincolnshire Regiment. He had previously fought in the Boer War for two years and ten months, and after that was employed at Messrs Jonas and Colver.

An interview with him was published in the Sheffield Daily Independent on 6 Nov 1915, in which he related how he had been wounded in fighting a few miles outside Lille in France. His unit was attacking, and in running across to take cover he was shot three times in the left arm. Another bullet tore through his right sleeve, but was deflected by a German watch which he had bought in Sheffield for 2s 11d!

Private Bailey related that he had seen more fighting in one day of the Great War than all the time he had been in South Africa. The fighting near Lille had been extremely fierce, and they had been saved by Indian (Sikh) troops. He also spoke with admiration of the British officers and their care for the wounded. They took many risks to help them, and the 1st Lincolnshires had only four officers left. The Army Medical Corps too did everything possible in caring for the wounded.

Bailey was optimistic that the fighting would soon be over, and said he had heard nothing of the stories of men fighting up to their waists in water in the trenches. Where he had been stationed they had been as comfortable as they could be under the circumstances, and had found a plentiful supply of straw from farmhouses. The noise from shells was head-splitting at first, but they soon got used to it.

After being wounded, Bailey had been sent to a hospital in Manchester. Upon his return to Sheffield he visited his former employers, Messrs Jonas and Colver, and was given a warm welcome by Mr Robert Colver.

Barker, Private Charles

Private Charles Barker served as clerk to the supply officer with the 3rd Division Army Service Corps. Before the war he had been employed at Vickers Ltd. His parents lived at 231 Marlcliffe Road, Sheffield, and on 21 Oct 1915 the Sheffield Daily Independent published a letter which he had written to them on 15 Sep 1915.

He wrote:

"I expect you are anxiously awaiting news from me, so here goes. First of all, let me tell you that I am quite well, but, of course, not quite so fit as if I were at home, owing to continual strain, short sleep, etc. I have not fared too bad as regards food, but, of course, you must know that I cannot get the proper support required; it is impossible under present conditions. I am writing this letter sitting on a box near our wagon in the centre of a village (I dare not name the place) square. A fierce battle is raging close at hand, and the wounded are continually being brought in. We are getting the best of things, of course. I have seen some horrible sights, which I shall never forget.

The other night I went into a farmyard to get some straw to make a bed of, when I stumbled over a heap (it was a dark night), and on striking a match I discovered two dead Germans. One had his chest shot away, the other part of his head. My word, didn't we have a fright. I cleared from there jolly quickly. I have had some very narrow escapes, but if I continue as up to the present I shall come home safe enough. Am looking forward to being home for Christmas. I hope to goodness the war will be over by then. I don't see how it can possibly last much longer. The Germans are decidedly getting the worst of it, and we are taking many prisoners. A large number of them surrender of their own free will, being only too glad to get into our hands.

Three nights ago we experienced a terrible rainstorm, and the troops suffered horribly. I was one of the fortunate ones -had the shelter of a motor lorry. The last two nights I have slept in a private house -all right; tonight I may be sleeping on the wet grass, with no cover whatever. This is a rough life without a doubt, but I shall be proud of the experience. I cannot tell you all I should like in this letter, but, of course, when I come home, you shall have my full experience. When are you going to write to me? I have written heaps of letters and postcards since I left England, but all I have received in return are about four postcards. You have my address; please write. What the dickens are you all thinking about, sitting in your easy chairs whilst I am -Ah, well, I am only joking.

A little cake and chocolate would be very acceptable. I have almost forgotten the taste of cake. Let me tell you there is no place like England. Oh, I shall have a lot to tell you when I get home. My knowledge of French has come in very handy, and the troops often make use of me (I mean my own fellows). Matches are very scarce here. I should like two or three boxes of good English waxlights.

Brown, Private

Private Brown served in the 1st Battalion King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry. His letter, written whilst he was recovering from his wounds in hospital at Stretford, was published in the Sheffield Daily Independent on 5 Jun 1915. In it he described his part in the Battle of Ypres.

He wrote:

"My share in the battle was 21 days and nights of fighting before being wounded. On 8 May the Germans bombarded our trenches in a terrific manner for about eight hours, and then made a charge. They came in thousands, in the struggle about 34 of us found ourselves alone in the trench we were holding. Whether our comrades were taken prisoners or not we do not know. The Germans set fire to a building on our left flank, and we could not see what was happening owing to the thick smoke and being engaged in checking the advancing enemy. With our two machine guns and rapid rifle fire we mowed them down as they came along. Unfortunately our numbers were reduced to 18.

The German artillery was constantly shelling the wood behind in order to prevent reinforcements reaching us, but at the same time they were keeping their own men from surrounding us. The few of us were expecting at any moment to fall into the hands of the Bavarians we were opposed to, but when the smoke had cleared away all we could see were the bodies of the dead Germans."

He went on to relate that he and his comrades had made their way to a position occupied by another regiment. The Germans then made another assault: "I had a narrow escape. My hat was blown off by a bullet, which did not even touch my hair. About half an hour afterwards I felt a sting at the top of my right arm, and found that I had been shot. The pain gradually got worse. I could not use my rifle, but I managed to give ammunition to the others. Those who were wounded had to proceed to the dressing station about a mile away. We crawled for some distance on our hands and knees till we came to a road that leads to a wood where the Germans were. We stood up and made a dash, but the enemy had someone waiting for those who might try to cross.

We had reached the centre of the road, when my comrade was killed on the spot. I received a nasty wound in the body from an explosive bullet. I managed to scramble into some ruined buildings, though I was losing a great amount of blood. No one heard my calls for help, but I managed to bite open my field dressing and place it on my wound. I became very weak, and had given up all hope of being saved when an officer came dashing past and helped me."

Chubb, Private Arthur

An interview with Private Chubb (R.A.M.C.), in which he described his experiences as a prisoner of war, appeared in the Sheffield Daily Independent of 5 Jul 1915. His home address was 106 Newman Road, Wincobank.

Chubb was a nursing orderly, and he related that he had left England on 16 Aug 1914 with the 4th Cavalry Field Ambulance. After arriving in France they went to Rouen, and then to Mons where they were engaged in three days' fighting. His field ambulance had established hospitals at the church, and at the Town Hall, of the town of Bertry, in the province of Nord. When the army retreated Chubb was left at the hospital with two medical officers and five other nursing orderlies, taking care of the 250 wounded men under their charge. On 26th Aug 1914 (Chubb's 20th birthday) the Germans fired on the church, blowing part of the roof off and killing one of the patients. They took over the hospital an hour later, and Chubb became a prisoner of war.

After a traumatic journey via Brussels and Duisburg they were taken to a detention camp at Freidrichsfeld. Here the conditions were primitive -they were kept in huts with no sides to them, and fed on a diet of cabbage and black bread. The camp was in a big field covered with huts, each holding 600 men. It was surrounded by two lines of barbed wire, a live electric wire which would kill anyone who touched it, and a moat. In Nov 1914 a number of English and French prisoners attempted to escape by digging a tunnel. Twenty Frenchmen succeeded in getting away, and after this a double guard was put on the camp, and prisoners were confined to the huts. After Oct 1914 the conditions improved they were allowed two meals a day of potatoes and turnips, and a round of black bread. Up until that time, Chubb had gone with bare feet, but he now received a pair of Dutch clogs (which he found extremely uncomfortable!). The prisoners had no soap, and only one shirt each, with the result that they were soon covered in vermin. At Christmas 1914 parcels from England began to arrive. In Apr 1915 the Sheffield Daily Independent newspaper published Chubb's name, with the result that he was 'adopted' by a lady, Miss E Herron, of Brierley, Barnsley, who sent him parcels on a regular basis. The parcels, which contained food and cigarettes, were much welcomed. Chubb had received only one letter from his family, and one parcel, though his father and brother had sent items every week. His mother had sent him a shirt.

On 5 Mar 1915 a new general arrived at the prisoner of war camp, and conditions improved enormously after that time. The prisoners were allowed proper beds and were given socks and shirts, but the food became even worse: each man received a pint of meal and water in the morning, a pint of horse beans and potatoes at dinner time and at four o'clock coffee and six ounces of the unpalatable black bread. Chubb emphasised that if it had not been for parcels from home the prisoners would have gone very hungry indeed.

Because he was a member of a medical corps, Chubb was released along with 300 others in exchange for a similar number of prisoners of war in Allied hands. They returned to England via Holland, where their reception was 'the finest I have ever experienced'.

His final comment of the interview was 'I will never be a prisoner of war again. I will shoot myself first'.

Cole, Quartermaster Sergeant Herbert

Herbert Cole served with the Hallamshire Territorials, and his letter to his brother William Cole, of Norfolk Street, was published in the Sheffield Daily Independent of 19 Jun 1915. As the newspaper commented, his letter (which described his experiences in Flanders) gave a graphic insight into the hardships which were being endured by Sheffield Territorial infantryman in the firing line. It also described the devastating effect the war was having on the Belgian landscape.

Part of his letter is reproduced here:

"I am writing this on a grassy spot two miles in the rear of the firing line, for we are enjoying a brief but welcome change in the reserve. Close by are ruined farm buildings, used as billets, and not more than 100 yards away a battery of big guns whose noisy discharge nearly shakes the teeth out of one's head. Hereabouts the country is desolated and most buildings simply pulverised. We are lucky to get a decent barn instead of the perforated cowsheds and stables that usually have to serve us for billets when we are out of the trenches. We spend a good deal of our rest period in getting from behind our armour of accumulated mud. This part of Europe seems to consist of just solid clay and ought to be re-named Flounders, because a day's rain converts a trench into a canal of soupy mud, successive layers of which soon enshroud us, so that should the sun once get us dry before we emerge from our chrysalis-like state we should need cracking like a nut.

In a little town (all ruins) behind us the local brewery -dedicated to a saint, by the way, but never employed to holier work than now -is utilised for bathing resting troops and can accommodate 800 daily. The long rows of large barrels, from each of which peers the ecstatic face of a thankful Tommy, recalls the Arabian Nights tale. The town still receives periodic shellings, and the adjacent church is the only one I have seen lately with steeple still standing, although the main body as well as the surrounding graves, with their tawdry memorial headings, have been cruelly bashed.

Wherever we go the vile roads merge imperceptibly into evil-smelling ditches on both sides, for they are subjected to constant and severe treatment from heavy transports and shell fire. Scarcely a building can one see free of gaping holes, or shattered roof, nor a church that is more than a skeleton. The bare walls of ruined farms, convents, and schools have all too many evidences of hastily extemporised fortifications such as carts, barrows, and bedding filled with earth to form barricades, and single bricks knocked out of walls to make loop-holes.

The countless bullet marks on everything sufficiently indicate desperate attack and resistance, without the little group of graves (invariably found nearby) each spot marked by a roughly-made cross upon which is set forth each poor lad's number, rank, and name, and the date he died. Numberless isolated graves are to be found in fields and by the roadside; many, alas, of unknown soldiers, in all probability posted as "missing".

Troops must necessarily change over in the trenches by night, or aerial scouts would soon direct artillery fire upon them. Inside every soldier is a worker. At night the work is hard, but everybody seems capable of putting more muscle and enthusiasm into it than is usually apparent at home. The majority are employed making, strengthening and extending parapets or traverses, these latter being required to protect from enfilading fire."

His letter finished with:

"Broadly speaking, though, day and night get so mixed that it soon becomes difficult to decide which day of the week it is. Meal times do not exist as such, but are merely irregular occasions. So time goes on, and nearer comes the day when the Empire will welcome home its sons full of a newer understanding and more united than ever."

Dexter, Cyril

Cyril Dexter's stirring tale of his escape disguised as a refugee was told in the 'Sheffield Daily Independent' of 23 Oct 1914.

21 years old, he was one of the Sheffield men in the Naval Brigade who had taken part in the defence of Antwerp. He was one of Kitchener's Army - a volunteer who had enlisted on 2 Sep 1914. Before the war he had worked in the smiths' department at Vickers Ltd, not far from his home at 47, Ripon Street, Attercliffe. He had been educated at Woodbourn and Hammerton Street schools, and I was well-known as a comet player in the orchestra at Bodmin Street Wesleyan Reform Brotherhood. Originally Dexter had been stationed, along with 500 other recruits (most of whom were of the King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry) at Pontefract. He went into training at Walmer Camp, Dover and in a month was on the active service list. He crossed to Dunkirk on 4 Oct 1914 and then travelled by armoured train to the outskirts of Antwerp. Very soon the men were in the trenches in front of the main ring of forts around Antwerp where they were engaged in fighting from Tuesday to the following Saturday morning.

He reported that all the Naval Brigade were in high spirits, singing favourite songs like 'The Boys of the Old Brigade' and 'The Boys of the Bulldog Breed'. They were given an enthusiastic welcome by the Belgians, who shouted 'Vive les Anglais'. Dexter's brigade fought alongside the Belgians about seven miles from the German siege guns. He painted a graphic picture of the fighting; German infantry were nearby, constantly attacking and retreating, shells screaming through the air incessantly. The men were practically deaf for a time from the noise of explosions when they left the trenches and the noise was such that he said that he had trembled for an hour at first being exposed to the clamour, but after a while his nerves had settled. He continued, "I shan't forget going into the trenches. First we saw a big church blown down and on fire. Then just as we got in the trenches a Zeppelin came over, too high for our rifle fire. She dropped a smoke bomb to indicate our position. German shrapnel then came whizzing round in astonishing fashion. It swept the ground and killed our Colonel and partly buried ten men. We never had a bit of rest afterwards, from the night of Tuesday 6 Oct to the following Saturday morning. We had a cruel baptism of fire, and no mistake."

He then went on to describe how he had escaped disguised as a Belgian refugee. The troops were ordered to retire, but Dexter stayed behind in one of the outer trenches with a party to put out of action a number of motor cars and transport. Shortly afterwards a German party hoisted a flag on to Number 4 fort, and the scouts of the enemy force appeared, forcing the Marines into a hasty retreat into Antwerp. Antwerp was nearly deserted, and it seemed likely that the retreating soldiers would fall into German hands. Luckily they came across some Belgian women who were helping the allied soldiers to escape by disguising them in civilian clothes so that they could get across the Dutch order. Dexter said "This was a big tailor's shop. Some got coats, some overcoats, but I was lucky and got a full suit -perhaps that was easier because I did not require a big size. Afterwards we hid our rifles in the t100r of a cafe and made for the Dutch frontier". Here he fell in with another soldier; Frank Long, who was a chief officer's steward, and the two joined the crowds of Belgian refugees who were heading for England. The journey was a difficult one, with only apples to eat for three days, and taking care to avoid talking. He was touched by the pathetic faith of the Belgians in England. Their journey took them to Flushing, from where they got a boat to England. On arrival they went to the Admiralty and then to camp, where they were kitted out again before returning to the front.

Sad to relate, Cyril Dexter was later killed in action.

D'Hincourt, Count P. Fourier

D'Hincourt was a colourful character who lived in Sheffield for many years. He ran the International School of Languages, and The Sheffield Fencing Club at 141 Gell Street, and was later founder of the Sheffield Anglo-French Society, a master at a local grammar school as well as worked as war correspondent to the Sheffield Independent. He once staged a sword duel Nether Edge, a dramatic occasion at which he had sworn to kill his opponent and which was filmed by Jasper Redfearn, Sheffield's cinematographic pioneer. Rumours abounded that he had staged the fight simply as a publicity stunt for his fencing school. He died in France in 1949.

During World War I he acted as Official Translator for the British and French armies. Photographs of him appeared in the Sheffield Daily Independent on 1 Dec 1914, and Aug 1915, when he was pictured on horseback about to start a journey with a confident despatch.

He wrote an imaginative and poetic account of life in the trenches which appeared in the Sheffield Daily Independent of 3 Aug 1915. It ended thus:

"And each evening the concert begins Under this avalanche of iron and fire, in the midst of the infernal music, before this fairy pyrotechnic, the troopers get close to the parapet to avoid the bursting shells, dreaming of the comfort of their own hearths, resting through the weary time with their heads on the butts of their rifles, stirring occasionally at the periodic summons of a shell which bursts too close or too vividly to be agreeable. Slowly the hours pass in their clamorous monotony; little by little the stars fade from sight, the night becomes less dark, a yellow hand surges on the horizon behind the German trenches, forerunner of the sun. The night is finished."

Gush, Rev John H

Reverend Gush, who had also been a missionary to Africa, was appointed to the pastorate of St John's Wesleyan Church, Crookesmoor in Sep 1914, but volunteered as a chaplain to the Army.

He related his experiences at the Front with the Territorial Staffordshire Brigade of the North Midland Division in the Sheffield Daily Independent on 10 Nov 1915. He related that the chaplains were not allowed in the front line, but were able to attend to the wounded in the advanced dressing stations. These were primitive dug-outs where surgical work was very rough and ready, with rain and mud dripping down and the constant danger of exploding shells around them. After receiving initial treatment here the wounded were then taken several miles behind the firing line to casualty clearing stations where there were ample facilities and supplies, and where operations could be carried out.

He described how the dug-outs had been in a railway embankment, and the day after he visited them five of the six were destroyed by shells, all the occupants being killed. The medical staff and chaplains worked amidst constant danger and devastation. He described the work of the transport men as being of the most dangerous sort. They had to go right up to the firing lines every night, whilst the Germans were shelling the roads to try to hit the supply vehicles and reinforcements. The shells made huge holes in the road which had to be filled up, all the while enduring the raining down of shells. Religious services were sometimes given by the chaplains to men sitting in the holes made by shells.

Gush also commented patriotically on the nature of British soldiers. They whistle and sing, he said, even though they know they are quite likely to be killed at any time, and play football whilst high explosives burst nearby .

Marples, Sergeant C

Sergeant Marples (Coldstream Guards) had left the army two years before the outbreak of the war, and was called up as a reservist when the conflict began. In the meantime he had worked in the clerical department of Vickers Ltd. His home address was Lonsdale Road, Walkley.

His account of life at the front, and how he was wounded during the battle of the Aisne, was published in the Sheffield Daily Independent of 21 Oct 1914. He related that the soldiers had been woken up at 3 am, and whilst they were serving out rations shortly afterwards had been fired at, and some of them wounded, by German soldiers on the heights above them.

The Coldstream Guards had climbed the heights, but upon reaching the top of the ridge they had faced a massive German artillery and machine gun attack. Marples had sheltered in a sugar factory, which was soon reduced to rubble by the heavy gunfire. His platoon had then taken up a position next to a haystack on the ridge. An officer had given the order to 'Advance' -a command which Marples considered very ill-advised as the Germans were only 200 yards away on another, higher, ridge which could only be reached by passing through a valley. Almost immediately the officer was killed by enemy fire, and Marples was left in charge of the platoon. Though he had disagreed with the officer's order to advance, Marples felt compelled to carry it out as the next in command, but the men had scarcely gone six yards before they were all brought down by enemy gunfire. Four men were killed, and Marples himself was wounded in the arm. As the wounded lay beside the haystack, such was their position that they were fired upon by both the German and Allied armies, and they were in danger of being killed by their own side.

The gunfire continued for some time until at about 6 o'clock the British artillery began to gain the upper hand and the German soldiers retreated to their own trenches. The British wounded began to make their way back to their own lines when they heard cries for help from some of the men they had given up for dead. After rescuing them, they managed to reach safety some hours later.

Marples had then been put on a train to return to England, but he had developed rheumatic fever and was taken off the train at Angiers and put into hospital for treatment. There he had recovered, and had returned to England where he was now convalescing. Sadly, Sergeant Marples returned to the front and was killed a year later.

Mason, Rifleman Harry

Harry Mason was a Rifleman with the Ceylon Planters Rifle Corps, attached to the Australasian Divisional Headquarters Mediterranean Expeditionary Force. He was wounded in the Dardanelles in Apr 1915 and was treated at the Luna Park Hospital at Heliopolis in Cairo. Before the war he had worked as a journalist on the Sheffield Independent. Later he worked as a journalist in Ceylon and became manager of a tea plantation. His letter to his parents at Heeley was published in the Sheffield Daily Independent on 20 May 1915.

He wrote:

"Mine is not a serious case and it was not a very heavy price to pay for the privilege of taking part in such a great event as the attack on the Dardanelles. The landing took place on Sunday, 25 Apr, and I was wounded about mid-day on the Tuesday following the bullet entering my left side. It was not until Sunday 2 May that I reached hospital in Cairo. We sailed from Alexandria to go to the scene of action, and although the Dardanelles is only two days' sail away, we were kept aboard ship for about a fortnight until the whole force was ready to land.

On the Sunday morning, when I got on deck, the British Fleet was bombarding the Turkish forts at the entrance to the Dardanelles, as fast as they could work the guns. As we got nearer we could see the shells burst, working tremendous havoc amongst the unfortunate Turks. On shore a ship had been beached, and regiments were scrambling ashore under heavy fire. About an hour afterwards some boats drifted past us, full of soldiers and sailors, who had been wounded when trying to land. We picked up one of the boats. Some of the men were very badly hurt. Meanwhile a very heavy bombardment by the warships had been going on, and there was a great crackling of rifle fire. Our troops having occupied a long, 100v ridge were banging it into the Turks. Above all the noise the Queen Elizabeth's guns sounded as she put shell after shell into the forts at the entrance, which had evidently been partly re-established since the last bombardment.

Eventually our ship moved up the bay on the west coast of the Gallipoli Peninsula, where the Australian and New Zealand troops were landed. Part of this force was ashore already when our transport arrived, their landing having taken place under heavy rifle and shrapnel fire. The troops had to take a steep hill leading from the beach by assault, and the casualties were heavy. We landed later with the G.O.C., the Australian Division, General Birdwood, whose bodyguard we are. We worked hard for the two following days, building a shelter for headquarters staff and later carrying ammunition to the firing line.

A very determined counter attack was made by the Turks on the Tuesday and all hands had to reinforce the firing line. Off we went to it, and in about half-an-hour - I had a bullet into me. I crawled out of the line until I met a stretcher party, who dressed my wound and carried me down to the beach, prior to my being put aboard the hospital ship.

There were 500 wounded on the ship, I believe. From Alexandria we were taken to Cairo by Red Crescent train. The Turks put up a very good fight."

Shaw, H. D.

Wheeler H D Shaw was in the 7th Battery, 3rd R.F.A., and his letter to his parents was published in the Sheffield Daily Independent on 18 Sep 1915.

He wrote:

"When we came back with our last gun we found that our dug-out was hardly big enough. We had to crawl about on our hands and knees and so we decided to make it longer. It was rather a big job, but was worth the trouble. We can now stand upright, and the only drawback is the rats and mice. The bounders eat the sandbags. This leaves the soil exposed and you can imagine what happens when our guns commence to bark.

Take last night, for instance. We sleep next to the guns. About two in the morning I woke up with a start: our guns were playing 'Old Harry'. Every time they fired down tumbled the loose dust in clouds all over us. I was just about smothered. Gott straf rats and mice!

You should see our dug-out. You would kill yourselves with laughing. It is six feet wide and long enough for eleven men to sleep side by side, very close together. The walls are made of sandbags and the roof is of iron and splinter-proof, though I should not say it is shell-proof. All sorts of odds and ends come in for a floor. Ours starts with floor boards of all thicknesses: next comes a front door painted green, and then two sides of a beautiful wooden bedstead. In addition there is a backdoor painted black, and also back of a wardrobe.

My bed is a novelty. I have raised it from the floor, and sleep above the sergeant, half-way up the wall in bunk fashion, the same as on board a ship. Above the bunk I have made a round porthole for a ventilator, in quite Jack Tar style. The chaps call our dug-out the White Star liner. From the door it looks just like the cabin of a boat. We are all sure we shall never 'go under' for we have plenty of rats, and you know how superstitious sailors are.

One little fly in the amber. When we were digging our floor deeper we came to a square of bricks set in with cement. We were all curious about it; some even thought of hidden treasure. We worked with picks, and at last loosened some bricks, which, without warning, disappeared from view. It turned out to be a kind of drain, and smells awfully. We try to forget it is there for we cannot send for the nuisance inspector.

The 7th have been visited by numerous generals, who all say we are the luckiest battery that has ever been on a battlefield. It seems almost uncanny. Only 100 yards away from us is a battery who every day are heavily shelled. Today, up to 10 o'clock,

I should think they have had 40 shells, but we, lucky beggars, get no direct hits. While I am writing this I can see shells dropping on their cookhouse.

Our infantry chaps are splendid. It does one's heart good to see them marching down to the trenches, always singing, with never a word of complaint."

Stephenson, Colonel H K

The former Lord-Mayor of Sheffield was in command of the 4th West Riding (Howitzer) Brigade, R.F.A (Territorial) 49th West Riding Division. His letter to Sir William Clegg was published in the Sheffield Daily Independent of 5 Jun 1915.

He wrote:

British Expeditionary Force. 30 May 1915.

Mr dear Sir William, You may like a line to tell you how I am getting on in this extraordinary war -still a "trench war", I am sorry to say. Well, my brigade has been specially fortunate, for up to eight days ago, it had the honour of being in the thick (so far as artillery is ever in the thick) of the heavy fighting that has been taking place on the south or left flank of our armies. We spent only one day in Havre, and then did a 24-hour train journey to the rail head and marched to within ten miles of the fighting line, where we remained billeted in farms for a week to get used to things. Then we were told we were to be detached from the W.R. Division and lent to the 1st Division, which at home is the Aldershot Division and which had been out since the beginning of the war. It was this Division which made the attack from Richebourg on 9 May, and it was with a view to this attack and the terrific bombardment which heralded it that we were required.

As you know the attack, or rather not one attack but two, for it was repeated including the initial bombardment, in the afternoon, failed except so far as it relieved pressure elsewhere."

After describing the attacks, he went on to say: "I had my headquarters in a little red brick house (like a dolls' house) close to the ruined church in which the graves had been burst open, and we were under shell fire daily, often many times a day. We had however, a good cellar, in which we had our telephones, and in important actions and whenever we were shelled we used "to go to ground" there in comparative safety.

My headquarters consisted of myself with adjutant, orderly, officer and doctor. My vet lived at the wagon lines with the horses, and there was also my ammunition column some five miles back on a farm. My batteries were in position some 500 yards from the house I lived in, the guns carefully emplaced and embowered with trellised branches. They were actually in orchards up against hawthorn fences, through which the noses of the guns protruded. They were very well hidden and the enemy never really found them, though we had a few casualties and one gun partially disabled by shell fire. The most thrilling episode we had was when five Highland Infantry officers asked us to allow them to sleep at our house for a few nights before the attack on 16 May. They had their own mess in another part of the village, but we asked some officers to lunch with us.

Just as we were about to sit down, at one o'clock, the Germans started shelling and a big shell exploded close to the house. Two officers rushed out of the house to get some of their men out of a house across the road next to the churchyard and as the men streamed out another shell came, knocking down the pillar at the entrance to the side passage to the back of our house (the back entrance, in fact) and the officer was wounded and several men killed and wounded. The very next shell hit the billet next the church and there were more casualties. In fact, about three shells accounted for some 15 of the H.L.I. in about three minutes. Our house was, of course, converted into a "dressing" station, but one man we took in was past aid, and another not much better. The officer's wounds were not dangerous. One of our guests was killed in the fighting on 17 May, and another was wounded on the same day. So that all our guests were accounted for -very tragic! Our doctor was very good with the wounded, whom he dressed in the cellar while we held lamps and torches. Some of them were in an awful state.

On Friday 21 May we got orders in the middle of the night to re-join the W.R. Division, now called the 49th (West Riding) Division and we left R. at 5.30 am on Saturday after assisting an infantry attack at 1.30 am. Rather quick work. Here we are in comparative peace, as the rest of our division has been all the time - merely holding the line. Our men christened our former headquarters "Lyddite Villa" because it was shelled so often. They call this "The Wharfedale Home of Rest!!" (they all come from Wharfedale). This will tell you what they think of the change. My present house is not quite immune from shell fire, as it is again near the church, but it is at present intact, whereas my last one had had all the top floor wrecked, and was without windows which had all been blown out.

Now I have told you enough about myself and my brigade. I am in a way enjoying the rest, but there was a certain excitement about being in action and taking part in really big operations night and day for three weeks which we all miss here."

Thickett, Drummer Frank

Drummer Frank Thickett, of the Hallamshires (4th York and Lancaster Regiment), was the first serviceman to be given public recognition in Sheffield for being awarded a Distinguished Conduct Medal.

Thickett was a Stocksbridge man who had worked in the sheet mill department of Samuel Fox and Company's steelworks. His parents were Mr and Mrs Charles Thickett.

The medal was presented on Saturday 30 Oct 1915 by the Lady Mayoress Mrs Oliver Wilson at the Town Hall, which was decorated with the Allied flags.

Photographs and a report of the event appeared in the Sheffield Daily Independent of 1 Nov 1915. A crowd of 10,000 had gathered to watch the ceremony, filling Surrey Street and Town Hall Square. Thickett's arrival was delayed because he had been involved in an accident at Deepcar when the Corporation bus on which he was travelling collided with a motor car and motor cycle, but he eventually joined his battalion at Endcliffe Hall and marched with them into the city, accompanied by music from the Hallamshires' Band. As Thickett mounted the platform to receive his medal there were huge cheers from the crowd, and the band played 'Have you got another little girl at home like Mary?'. On the platform the Lord and Lady Mayoress were accompanied by Drummer Thickett's parents and friends, Colonel Branson (ex-commander of the Hallamshires), Major Wortley and Captain Hay, and a group of wounded soldiers from the Sheffield Base Hospital.

Thickett was awarded the D.C.M. for conspicuous gallantry on the Yser Canal on 13-14 Jul 1915. During a heavy artillery bombardment when all telephonic communications had been cut, he waded across the canal with an urgent message from the firing line to headquarters. He performed a similar feat on 8-9 Aug 1915, crossing the canal by a single plank and in doing so saved his regiment from being wiped out.

Happily Drummer Thickett survived the war.

WALKER, Charles

Sergeant. He was with the Hallamshire Rifles for 18 years. He had fought in the Boer War without injury. Shot shortly after leaving the trenches by a sniper. A letter to his widow from Lieutenant J W Reynolds included the following extract: "I need not say how much he will be missed by us all, and especially by myself, for we had worked together for so long, indeed we both were appointed to No.15 Platoon at the same time. We had gone through so many risks together safely, and it does seem terribly hard that he should have been killed just when he was leaving the trenches for a well-earned rest. He will be greatly missed by the officers in command of D Company, and not least by myself. He was always cheery and bright, however daring and difficult were the things we had to face."
